Rural Free Delivery Necessitated in paid up shares.

No. 4637—Kel.iwahanuku to M. Aona; E. P. 1686, kul. 4878, Lahaina, Maui. Con Offices.

Former postmasters of the country districts on each of the Islands of the group do not take kindly to the ironclad reguations of Uncle Sam's Postoffice Department. This has been clearly demonstrated since M. H. Flint, Spec al Agent of the United States Postal Department, has taken charge of the affairs here. Sundry packages of blacks, papers and small oocks such as are used in every postofdee, large or small, have been returned from the postmasters who served under the Republic.

According to the special agent, the regulations, strict agreements and general red tape of the new Government has scard off a great many of the rural postmasters, and these districts are practically without any kind of mail service.

"This means the establishment of a rural free del very system," said Mr. Flint of Fort. to an Advertiser reporter yesterday, at returned packages. "By rural free delivery I mean that a system of delivery rom house to house in the sparsely setded portions of the Islands will be insticuted. Maul seems to be one of the Isiands which has been struck by this general refusal to take up with the United states pestal system. There are a great many foreigners there, Scotch and angsh, who do not desire to become Amer. can citizens, and that cuts us off from getting good postmasters.

"I have arready sent to Washington fifty-four postmaster's bonds and will send six more shortly. There are between eighty-five and ninety offices, all told, so for the present there are about thirty ofaces whose postmasters have not quali-

That a marine creature can be pois-Says the Revue Generale des Sciences, Hartford," in an account of the experiments just Man adds to his food large proportions of this same salt, and is incommoded if deprived of it. Sea salt thus seems to be of use to many living organisms and indispensable to some, M. Jacques Loeb announces very interesting experiments that prove that this chlorid of sodium, when purified and freed from the other salts that accompany it in the sea, is a violent poison for sea creatures. Perhaps it might Bk. St. Katherine, Saunders, 14 days also be poisonous to man if he did not from San Francisco, with general mer- take into his system also with his food and drink a certain quantity of potash and lime salts, which are its antidotes.

"Loeb takes small marine fish, newly Schr. Luzon, Anderson, 20 days from caught, of the genus Fundulus, and Gray's Harbor, with 745,000 feet of lum- puts them into a solution of pure sodium chlorid, containing the same proportion of this sait as sea water; at the end of twelve hours all the fish are dead. If this salt solution be diluted with distilled water, the fish live longer, the length of the time being in ratio to the extent of the dilution. . . . They live indefinitely if they are put into sea water, even if 5 per cent of pure chlorid of sodium be added to it. The chlorid of sodium must, then, act as a poison; but sea water must contain antidotes to it." The experimenter, in searching for these antidotes, found that the chlorids of magnesium, potassium, and calcium, even in small proportions, diminished the poisonous action of the salt, and that in certain proportions the two latter rendered the solution able to sustain life as if it were natural sea water. The same results were obtained with many other marine creatures. To quote again:

"Here are interesting facts whose theoretical importance is considerable. They show us very strikingly the part played by the mineral composition of THE premises of Mrs. A. Rosa, on King the surrounding medium in vital phenomena; they reveal the unexpected fact that pure sodium chlorid is a poison as are the chlorids of potassium and calcium, while the mixture of these three bodies in the proper proportions is, on the contrary, favorable to the preservation and development of certain living creatures.

"Loeb believes that the metallic ions of these salts from combinations with lasm; that these combinations are quite easily dissociable, so that in the presence of a pure salt, such as sodium chlorid, the sodium ion takes the place, in the protoplasm, of the potassium, calcium, and magnesium ions, giving compounds that are not capable of sustaining the life of the organism. These, of course, are but hypotheses; Mr. Loeb promises to establish their correctness by a series of experiments. His study of the toxicity of sodium chlorid is the first of this promised series."-Translation made for The Literary Digest.
